What affected the Fund's performance this period?

The Shelton International Select Equity Fund returned 3.5% in 2024, underperforming the MSCI AC World ex-US index return of 5.5% by 2%.

Large growth stocks with momentum led the way, even outside the United States. These are areas the fund was underweight in. The strategy strives to neutralize portfolio exposure to such styles, and tends to find better opportunities in smaller stocks where the information inefficiencies are greater.

Positions in Israel and Japan benefitted the fund, while political turmoil in France and Canada pulled down our positions there. China and Hong Kong were mixed - these regions underperformed most of the year except for a spastic rebound in late September when the Chinese Central bank undertook a round of monetary easing.

Momentum as a style dominated equity markets globally, not only for large cap US stocks like the Magnificent Seven, but broadly across Europe and most of Asia as well. This dynamic was particularly strong in sectors like technology and select consumer discretionary names, with investors gravitating toward companies demonstrating consistent earnings resilience and strong pricing power.
